#16 nationally, and #1 in NY, in the number of Associate Degrees awarded to Hispanic students

#11 nationally in the number of Associate Degrees awarded to Asian American students

#10 nationally, and #1 in NY, in the number of Associate Degrees awarded to all minority students

#7 nationally, and #1 in NY, in the number of Associate Degrees awarded to African American students
Analysis indicates that the CUNY system ranks #3 nationally in economic mobility as 7.2% of students start their education in the lowest quintile, but find themselves in the highest quintile in their early 30s.

For BMCC:
Entering students come from families with some of the lowest median family incomes in the country (719 out of 748 community colleges).

Entering students come from families among the most likely to be in the lowest economic quintile (17 out of 748 community colleges).
Despite these realities

6.1% of students were in the highest income quintile at age 34

41% of students moved up at least two quintiles.

This percentage, which reflects overall economic mobility, has landed BMCC as the #3 community college nationally in overall economic mobility.

The average female salary was among the highest for community college graduates nationwide.
